Penguin Random House LLC, 2013. Softcover. Book Condition: New. According to the Huffington Post, "The prevalence of parent-reported cases of autism is significantly higher now than it was just five years ago, according to new Centers for Disease Control and Prevention data released Wednesday. "From 2011 to 2012, 1 in 50 school-age children had a diagnosed autism spectrum disorder according to their parents--up from 1 in 86 in 2007. [This] study provides growing evidence that [the] U.S. is underestimating the prevalence of autism spectrum disorder," Michael Rosanoff, associate director of public health research and scientific review at the non-profit Autism Speaks, said in an e-mail to HuffPost. Last year, the CDC revised its go-to estimate of the prevalence of autism in the U.S., saying it now affects 1 in 88 children, up from 1 in 150 in 2002. That is the estimate most widely used by health care providers, public health officials and media outlets when quantifying the prevalence of autism in the U.S., and came from the CDC's Autism and Developmental Disabilities Monitoring Network, which collected data from health and special education records of 8-year-olds living in 14 communities across the country in 2008. "Because the two estimates used different approaches to identify cases, they are not directly comparable, but Rosanoff believes the new parental-report data suggests that "1 in 88" figure is low." The alarming spike in autism in recent years has sent doctors and parents on a search for answers. And while many controversies have erupted around the issue, none have gotten us any closer to a definitive explanation, and many key concerns remain unexplored. Moving beyond the distractions of the vaccine debate, The Autism Puzzle is the first book to address the compelling evidence that it is the pairing of environmental exposures with genetic susceptibilities that may...
