Excerpt: .to breakfast even with a soiled collar, or untidy hair. A knot of bright ribbon, blue for instance, because you know it will wash, just at the join of the frill or collar, or a fresh flower, if ever so simple--a few primroses, a bunch of daisies, or a spray from any hedgerow, of which there are plenty about Oswaldtown, is a very great improvement to any woman s dress. Girls dress nicely before they become wives. It is my opinion that they should be much more particular after. If they would only watch for the pleased look on the husband s face, as a neatly dressed wife greets him on his return from business, I fancy there would be a little more taste displayed than there is. Put that down in your memory, dear. That I will, dear Lizzie. I see now why you are so particular in your dress, and why you are so fond cf flowers, natural flowers I mean. Certainly. I should not wear sham flowers, Katie. No, dear; for the best of reasons, they are shams, and so--scentless. You are quite right, Katie. Yesterday, you may remember, we had no flowers in; but the spray of ivy I gathered from the wall at the back of the house was fresh and green; and did not you hear what my husband said to me when he came in? Yes, Lizzie; I did. He said, I like you in that holland...
